loan, the pawnbroker, and the professional agitator are the principal gainers. Strikes seldom effect the they aimed at by them, but they very often lead to results which are the very opposite of those intended to prevent. Working men should not blindly rush into these dangerous courses, but before they venture on a strike, they should always consider the effects of it on their personal welfare, their families, and the welfare of the community. The popular imagination always tells his thoughtless dupes of the glory "and" manliness" displayed by them in relating the "tyranny" of the capitalists, but he never reforms them how they are to be recompensed for their wrongs. The strike, however, is a means, and not an end, and the misery, degradation, and poverty endured by them during the strike he so vauntingly defends. Perhaps my remarks may induce some of my fellow-tollers to judge for themselves, and think of

 The state of the operative is often most deplorable. With a large family to maintain, and with but small wages to enable him to do so, he is obvious to every eye a victim of his own folly. He is a poor creature dependent on him, and that every penny of wages lost so much subtracted from the pecuniary resources of the household. Instead of wasting his time in unprofitable idleness, it is necessary for his own family that he should continue to work, and engaged in profitable industry, otherwise he will render his condition worse instead of better. In a strike, the unemployed are often reduced to a state of starvation and misery; but while this to a very slight extent benefits the nation, it extends the circle of privation and discomfort, for every penny thus contributed must be extracted from the industrial earnings of others. No man can afford to be idle, and the more he is better than none at all, or that a forced state of idleness is better than obtaining an honest livelihood by the exercise of our industry. I could greatly enlarge on this topic, but want of space restricts me.
The effects of a Strike on the interests of a trade.
 Strikes are always detrimental to the interests of a trade. The opposition to machinery in Northampton and Stafford will encourage its use in such places as Leicester, Glasgow, Wolverhampton, Manchester, &c., and thus the operatives of those places will be enabled that every new factory opened, and every fresh district into which the trade is introduced, increases the competition among those who oppose the new system. The workman, instead of attempting to drive the machinery out of the market, should introduce them into his trade, so that instead of fearing competition he might defy it. It is easy to give instances of the evil working of strikes, so far as regards the localities in which they occur. The combinations of the operatives of the silk trade in Lyons, and the audacity, drove a great number of lace frames from that district, and caused establishments to be transferred in Devonshire. The increase of the silk trade in Manchester is partly owing to its migration from Lyons, and the same may be said of the cotton trade, from the restrictions placed on labour by the Luddites. The history of every trade teems with instances of the danger and impolicy of attempting place restrictions on labour and the employment of
 The best shown by the fact that during the period of a strike the bakers, butchers, grocers, and their fellow-traders, suffer a great falling off of business, and the community at large are the sufferers. The pawnbroker fills his rooms with the goods and chattels of the poor. At the same time, the local taxes and taxes increase, while the ability of the inhabitants to pay them is lessened; the natural consequence is, that the community are reduced to confusion, distress, and misery, far worse than the real or supposed evils which the strike was intended to remedy.
 These are facts patent to all, and I earnestly utter these remarks not as a plea, but as a warning to the operative, and no popular feelings to inflame. A poor and humble factory operative, I return from my daily toil, amid the noisy clanging of the machines, with my mind full of the most distressing and painful considerations, and afterwards, when I feel the need of repose, I sit down to study the subjects on which I write—not with a view to awaken the wildest passions of my brethren—but to right them in their feelings of discontent, and to aid them and the wrong. I do not, therefore, but justly and kindly for I only declaim against strikes because I believe them to be most injurious to the interests of my order; but if my fellow-tollers will not listen to the counsel of evil-minded men; let them do that which is right; let them respect the liberties and liberties of others, and they will never impair their own interests, endanger their welfare, and will never have to repent of their course against the interference, against impolicy, and against the numerous social evils which are the real causes of our poverty and misery. My brothers have genial feelings: appeal to their reason as a man, not to their passions as a mob; let them be guided by the counsel of wisdom; let them listen to the counsel of evil-minded men; let them do that which is right; let them respect the liberties and liberties of others, and they will never impair their own interests, endanger their welfare, and will never have to repent of their course against the interference, against impolicy, and against the numerous social evils which are the real causes of our poverty and misery. ## COMPLIMENTARY DINNER TO MR. J. F. DOWNES, AT BROWNLOW HILL.

On Tuesday last, at a complimentary dinner given to Mr. J. F. Downes, by the tenantry of the Brownlow Hill Estate, and the numerous personal friends of the gentleman.

The proposal first originated under the impression that Mr. Downes was about leaving the district to reside in another part of the colony, and such was the intention at the time. But, as it was afterwards ascertained that Mr. Downes was not about to leave the district, the dinner was postponed. However, the dinner having been proposed, and the proposal being warmly supported by the tenantry of the neighbourhood, and the universal respect and esteem in which Mr. Downes is held in the district for his many acts of benevolence, for his unbounded hospitality (notwithstanding he has been a very heavy loser by the disastrous floods which swept over his beautiful domain in the season of 1860 and 1861), and for his earnest endeavours at all times to promote the welfare of all around him. It was determined the dinner should take place for a second time at Brownlow Hill, and the result we secured must have been peculiarly gratifying to the guests and all parties concerned.

The weather was all that could be desired, a cloudless sky and a breeze, just warm enough to be agreeable. From an early hour numerous parties were seen wending their way to Brownlow Hill, some on foot, some mounted, and others in carriages. At 12 o'clock, so that by the time appointed for the dinner (one o'clock), there were upwards of 400 persons assembled. The proceedings were considerably enlivened by the arrival of Herr Zein's brass band from Sydney, which had been specially engaged for the occasion. The interior was very tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens, together with several flags, which had been kindly lent for the occasion. Conspicuous amongst the decorations were the Union Jack and the flag of the British Empire.

The hour having arrived, the dinner proceeded in a body, accompanied by band, to the private entrance for the purpose of escorting Mr. and Mrs. Downes and family to the tent, at the entrance of which were banners, with appropriate inscriptions, including the well-known motto, "The Tenantry of the Brownlow Hill Estate." The interior was very tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens, together with several flags, which had been kindly lent for the occasion. Conspicuous amongst the decorations were the Union Jack and the flag of the British Empire.

his heart, he would only add that, whether he continued to remain in the district or not, he would long remember the happy gathering of to-day, and retain a grateful sense of their kindness and regard. Mr. Downes returned his great and anxious thanks. The next toast was "Prosperity to the Agricultural Interest," which was proposed by Mr. B. Palmer, who said he was highly gratified to be present at such a meeting as this, and had much pleasure in proposing this toast, as he was interested in agriculture, and hoped to see the day come round when the farmer would get a fair return for his labour, and not as hitherto—at least for several seasons past—carry on his business at a loss. The toast was then received, and played "The Cornstalk Polka."

Mr. J. N. O'Leary rose to return thanks for the agricultural interest. He said that he had attended the dinner with great pleasure, and for the agricultural interest he returned his thanks, as he was deeply interested in these pursuits, and he was very glad to find that a better system of farming was beginning to find favour with the settlers. He had himself seen farms in this district that would be a credit to any English county; but they must stand still; they must take advantage of all improvements, and although prices had been very low lately, he hoped this would not always be the case. He liked these meetings very much, as they tended to bring together not only the settlers but their servants and labourers. They could meet here and discuss the advantages of equal treatment, and bring their wives with them to keep them in order. He had much pleasure in acknowledging the toast.

The next toast on the list was "The Commercial Interest," which was proposed by Mr. T. Buchanan, who said that this toast was properly followed by the Agricultural Interest, for without prosperity to agriculture the commercial interest could never be a flourishing state. Some remarks had been made by preceding speakers respecting the price of the wool, which was quite correct, but let the settlers here just compare their position for a moment with that of other parts of the world. Take, for instance, the Western States of America, which were almost entirely dependent on agriculture for their support. Why, only recently, in an extract from a Northern paper, he had seen it quoted as a fact that maize was only worth seven pence per bushel, and wheat only four pence. The inhabitants were buying it instead of fuel, burning it because it was cheaper than coal. Think of getting only three pence halfpenny per bushel. This was one of the reasons why the settlers here were so poor.

Amongst the numerous assemblages present, we noticed Mr. J. R. Chisholm and Mrs. Chisholm, Mr. J. N. O'Leary and Mrs. O'Leary, Mr. B. Palmer, Mr. J. H. Martin, Mr. J. H. Martin, and numerous other gentlemen well known in the district. Grace having been said by the Rev. T. Hassall, a vigorous attack then commenced on the good things provided, and we must mention that the dinner was a most successful one, and the guests were all well satisfied. The dinner was a most successful one, and the guests were all well satisfied. The dinner was a most successful one, and the guests were all well satisfied.
